

Mailing List Gold

If you have been in touch with the Internet Business and Marketing world for some time, I am sure that you have heard of the overused saying "the money is in the list" being quoted by many Internet Marketers. Of course, that is often true only if you harness your mailing list well enough and that your subscribers are responsive that they DO bother reading your mails every time you send a broadcast to your mailing list. But if you are to have an Internet Business, you must have your own mailing list. No other exceptions. If you don't own a mailing list, that could only mean that you don't own a business in the first place. Before anything else, it is important for you to have good reasons to have your own responsive mailing list (and not just any kind of mailing list) in the first place. Consider the following: If you join a Network Marketing company, your upline would require you to write a list of 100 names of people whom you know. The people you know are your prospects because they might be interested in becoming a consumer or starting their own Network Marketing business like you. If you own a Conventional B2B Business, your target prospects are other businesses, and their information and contact details are likely to be found in the Yellow Pages or telephone directories. Thus the information found in Yellow Pages and the telephone directories are your list of prospects. If you play and sell Magic: The Gathering collectible cards, your list of prospects consists of those who play the same card game, too. Would a Pokemon player be interested in buying your Magic: The Gathering game cards? Only if he is a Magic: The Gathering player, too! So, why have your own mailing list? Because that is where your potential customers are! Tags: web, net
