Get the notebook paper out. Buy some binders and some dividers; pens and pencils with great erasers. You've got a big job ahead of you. And if you plan on carrying it off as a big success while impressing your boss and/or peers, you're going to need to get down and dirty in the trenches. Do you know what your first plan of action is? Do you have someone who is going to share all the little known, often overlooked details that you'll be held responsible for if they're not taken care of? For someone who's never put together their own seminar, the job can seem overwhelming. And in truth, without the proper advice from an experienced voice, the job is really too much for any single man or woman. The first step any event organizer should take when planning a seminar, is to research and find advice from someone who has done it before. Someone who can share all the nitty gritty. Lucky for you - you can now find all the important but sometimes hard to foresee details for setting up your first conference or seminar written down in one expert course. One special tell-all course that will walk you through the process of making sure your event goes off without a hitch. What's this course that you must get your hands on? It's called...
