There is no need to suffer from social interaction because you happen to stutter! Do You Have A Hard Time Getting Some Of Your Words Out? Or Maybe Your Child Is Teased At School Because They Stutter And Cant Speak Clearly Like Everyone Else? Do you dislike being in public with friends or family? Dear Friend, There are about three million people, just in the United States alone, that have trouble speaking clearly because of a stuttering disorder. Stuttering is a speech disorder in where there is a disruption or interruption of a normal speech flow. When people speak, they have to force some of their words out because the flow is blocked or broken. When they have to force what they have to say out of their mouths, it sounds cluttered. Sometimes people are not able to understand what they are saying. So people that stutter end up feeling left out and alone. People dont want to take the time to listen to what they have to say because they take too long to get their words out. Not only do they not want to be patient, but they are not interested in socializing with people that have this speech disorder. This causes the person with the stuttering problem to feel rejected. It can also have a negative effect on their self-esteem and confidence. They try so much to talk normal, but to no avail. It doesnt help when they take a few seconds to pronounce a word that people with normal speech can say without a problem. How about sitting at the table with other family members and not being able to talk fluently like everyone else? They could sit around and hold a conversation about the days events and when it came time to ask you a question or get your input, all you could do was nervously stammer and force yourself to get the words out. There is too much pressure for you to say what you need to without talking too fast and stumbling. What an embarrassing and unfortunate situation for you. Sometimes you even wondered if your family was able to understand what you were trying to convey. You dont have to deal with this dilemma all your life. There are ways that you can overcome your stuttering. I am not kidding, you can overcome this speech disorder and start talking normally! When you get this guide, Prevent Stuttering (Tips & Tricks to Help Combat Stuttering), you will have all the information you need to begin helping you.
